As you probably know, Adobe Photoshop costs a lot of money. This basic version contains the majority of the features of the full version. Adobe Photoshop elements is an alternative to this basic version. This version is a good option for non-professional photographers, graphic designers and web designers. This

In this guide, we'll show you how to open a photo, apply filters and effects, edit your photo, crop, resize, rotate, export your files, save your project, and add text. I hope this guide will be a help to the people who want to convert their creative projects into high-quality images. Table of content 1. What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.1.1)?

Q: Why does my XML data not deserialize correctly? I'm fairly new to c# and I'm dealing with some serialization. I have a class for a game (game.cs) and it contains a Dictionary for "data" which is where the serialized data is placed. One of the pieces of data in the "data" dictionary is a bool called isDamage. When my object is serialized, that bool turns into a string. I've verified that it does. I also have a custom Xml Serialization class that converts the string to a bool. When the deserialized data is parsed, it is skipping the section where my serialized bool is and it defaults to true, which I don't want. My deserialization method looks like this: public Game(XElement element) { string damageText = element.Element("DamageText").Value; if (string.IsNullOrWhiteSpace(damageText)) this.isDamage = false; else this.isDamage = Damage.FromText(damageText); gameName = element.Element("Name").Value; } When I run the code, I set breakpoints and step through the code, and everything looks normal. The only exception is that the parseion sets the isDamage as true, but that only happens after it encounters the element. In the debugging screen, it shows the XML element that I want to bind to the "isDamage" property, but it's just skipping that part of the XML and defaults it to true. I'm using the XmlSerializer (Which I've verified is properly defined in my assembly), and the XML looks like this: High true Does anyone know why this is happening and/or how I can fix it? A: You need to set your class's property to be settable using
