One of the more recent effects available is "Vignetting," which alters the brightness of the photograph to make it look like it was taken under a dark umbrella, for example, that is partially blocking the light. Vignetting is accomplished by using the Brightness/Contrast dialog box. The left-hand image is the original image. The right-hand image is the image created by selecting Adjustments | Brightness/Contrast from the Edit menu and using the dialog box. The dialog box will open automatically, as shown here. With the dialog box open, click and drag the slider all the way to the left or right to create the desired amount of brightness. We suggest using the edge of the slider to increase or decrease the brightness to the desired level and dragging the slider back to restore the original level. Another way to get a similar effect, although not as precise, is to use the Brightness/Contrast dialog box to create a new layer with the desired brightness, and use the adjustment layer to apply the desired brightness to the layer. When using the Brightness/Contrast dialog box to create an adjustment layer, you can manually move the slider's cursor to get a more precise adjustment. Once you've chosen the desired brightness, the adjustment layer can be made visible or hidden and then saved as a preset adjustment layer for future use. Once saved, the adjusted layer can be applied to a new image or layer by clicking the layer in the Layers palette, and choosing the adjustment layer preset you created in the dialog box. The same adjustment layer preset can then be applied to other images. For example, you might create a preset for a photograph taken under an umbrella with the intent of using it for a professional wedding portrait. This example is created using the HSL (hue, saturation, lightness) color-matching method from the Hue/Saturation dialog box, which allows you to adjust brightness with the Hue slider and saturation with the Saturation slider. Once the desired color is achieved, you can desaturate the image by clicking the Saturation button and dragging the slider left or right. Desaturating an image will remove most of the contrast, and can help reduce the contrast between light and dark areas. The saturation you chose can be applied to the layers or adjusted on a new image by selecting Adjustments | Curves from the Edit

May's Green Budget and these five facts about France André Campana, CEO of World Wildlife Fund France, based in Paris, and Jean-Louis Boré, CEO of WWF International (WWF-F), and Alexandre Bernheim, CEO of WWF International headquartered in London, give us a 360 degree view of the French economy and the need for climate action at home and abroad, in response to the results of the General Election in May 2017. France may have been defeated in the face of a Brexit that is a concrete and irreversible reality, but it remains a model to be followed by other European nations in responding to climate change. On June 17, 2017, the image of a nation defeated, and the Sarkozy act, an act of political creativity aiming at saving the country from a political impasse, were irrevocably erased from the political landscape. This is a major turnaround for France and it has helped the country to come to terms with the results of its campaign, which focused on two big questions: "who will be at the centre of the power in 2022", and "what will we win after Brexit". Our energy transition for a safer and less polluting world The part on the future of the centre-right government's energy policy has passed without even the slightest amendment to the original content, which aims to modernise French energy infrastructure by reducing $CO_2$ emissions and energy imports from foreign countries. This part of the French budget shows the commitment of the French president and his government to transform their energy policy by 2030 to ensure the energy transition that is necessary for tackling climate change. The French economy is a victim of the old way of doing things and the economy can change only through politics. To guarantee the future of the planet, we can no longer rely on the old saying "there is no alternative". Therefore, France is going to change the way it does business, which will require a difficult, painful and sometimes uncomfortable democratic debate. France's transition is unavoidable In his recent climate speech in Paris, French President Emmanuel Macron called on the G7 to commit to reducing emissions by half by 2050. This commitment will have to be at the heart of the climate action plan that will be presented by the French presidency in November 2017 and, let's hope, sanctioned by the EU and the COP. France's Paris
