Run a festival of destruction. Almost all early releases, the 40-year old arcade gamer, Nintendo, Sega and today: the iPad. Freedom Fall is a free-to-play action-adventure game. So you sit comfortably on your laptop, iPad or iPhone. You go, you play, you have fun, you win – and then you have to do it all again and again. Let's start. I am the organizer of the "Red Beard" festival, which draws the attention of a huge audience. I'm not entirely happy with you. These are dangerous times. You are not happy either. Your little car is on the way to the border. But on the way you have to take everything with you: all the flags, booths, and everything else from the cars you've collected to the parasols that have been left behind. You made it safely through. You've made it through the border. Now you have to manage everything and in no more than one week. Your show is finally starting. Hey! This is "The Red Beard Festival". Our goal is to have fun and earn a lot of money. The more cars you have, the more money you'll earn. The more cars, the more flags, the more interesting shows. We want to give you something back. The rules of the game: • Use your car as much as possible • Collect the flags, fill up your pockets and earn all the money • You drive freely, but watch the road, the speed limit is everything • We want to make sure that there is always a festival somewhere in the world. Because if there isn't, then no-one earns money. • We work out the elements for you with the developer, we don't need any of your help • We don't want to change anything else • The game is free of charge • We want to stay nice • We keep it for ourselves • It is not possible to play as the designer If you do everything right, you'll earn plenty of money. If you play, you want to lose money, so that you have to earn it all over again. If you play, you play for free. It is the fall of a warm autumn day with scores of leaves still clinging to the limbs of trees. A fine mist encircles the air with the smell of burnt leaves and damp earth from last week's rain.

So it is on this cheery day a local farmer is caught up in a gruesome kill. Scuffles and clashes of the leaves are interwoven with cries of pain and anguish as the frightened villagers wake up from their slumber and begin to converge upon the scene.

So it is up to the player to set out on a journey to rescue the harried farmer and unravel the mystery of what foul deeds have surrounded his tragic death.

Of course there are a number of twists and turns and plenty of surprises along the way. A visit to the local grocer's store, village school, offering to solve a puzzle at the local museum of natural history, offering employment to an eligible young woman or initiating a ploy against a band of ruthless assassins, are just some of the rewards awaiting the player along the way.

Playing as John Redfield, a character of upper middle age from a wealthy and upper class family, the player embarks upon a journey to help a kindly and socially conscious farmer who has no idea of the gruesome fate awaiting him. The way this adventure will unfold must become obvious as the game progresses and each cinematic chapter moves the plot forward.

Rancho El Cielo Rancho El Cielo was a Mexican land grant in present day Tehama County, California given in 1844 by Governor Manuel Micheltoarena to Antonio Perez and Manuel Valencia. The grant was immediately south of Rancho Arroyo de la Alameda. The grant extended along the south side of the River of the Same Name to the Rancho Arroyo de la Alameda, then continued northeast to California Creek, which drains into the San Joaquin River. History Perez and Valencia (1829-1875) came to California in the 1830s as part of Antonio Maria Lugo's band, and settled on lands that are now part of San José, California. With the cession of California to the United States following the Mexican-American War, the 1848 Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo provided that the land grants would be honored. As required by the Land Act of 1851, a claim for Rancho El Cielo was filed with the Public Land Commission in 1852, and the grant was patented to Perez and Valencia in 1875. Between 1850 and 1853, Alexander Campbell of the Rancho Sisquoc grant and part of Rancho Murieta was the owner of Rancho El Cielo. References El Cielo El Cielo El Cielo El Cielo El Cielo El Cielo

of War launches in closed beta for PC on April 9th. Though it is still in development, it's not a long way off full release. Through a Google document, I've been able to get an idea of how it will play, while some extra hands-on time at PAX Prime has strengthened that opinion. I spent some time with the Microsoft team at some PAX events, playing some of the game's final iteration, and I'm confident that Wings of War is an easy airplane shooter (if you don't like airplanes) that will at least shake up the traditional FPS in a long way. That's not to say it's a bad shooter. It's a bit like a spin on automatic. It likes to fill the screen up with targets at once and take you through multiple waves without pause. That makes it more likely to lull you into thinking it does nothing as much as it looks odd at first. But it's a lot like Dust: An Elysian Tail in that respect. It's an excellent shooter that sours on what it should be. My first flight comes aboard S-61, a single-pilot F-15C into a group of three mosquitoes. The primitive radar in the cockpit makes them pop up very quickly, which is equal parts frustrating and satisfying, as each pops up becomes a target for me. Luckily it's a short pop-up, so the trick is to go for the ground and deliver four or five strafes. My first goes down in flames. My second is more successful, though, as I manage to blast down one man-fighter and in a more manoeuvrable dogfight score two more enemy fighters. Though it's repetitive, working solo can get you really good at this, getting better as you play. You'll replay the same areas over and over to only see more planes. As you pick up pace it makes more sense to restart right at the area you kill. What Wings of War is doing with air combat will change the way we think about the genre. The first few times I face a cleverly placed opponent I feel as though I'm beating the keyboard. The trick is that though you have a gun in your plane and two air-to-air missiles, you're also responsible for controlling your speed and doing last-minute stuff to avoid being shot. A newly engaged opponent will scan the skies and then pick out the perfect target. You learn a new enemy's behavior patterns and you respond to it. This
