. Elementary Surveying By La Putt.pdf Q: How do you perform RMI - Nonblocking? I have a remote Java application that needs to communicate with other java process on a server. I'm using RMI to communicate with the server but it seems that RMI is not blocking. Does anyone have any tips on how to 'perform nonblocking RMI'? A: Does anyone have any tips on how to 'perform nonblocking RMI'? From a design standpoint I would look at using a message-driven protocol. The nice thing about message-driven protocols is that the producer and consumer of the messages don't block so much. You can think of message-driven protocols as building a type of event-driven distributed system. It should be able to keep up with bursts of (potentially asynchronous) traffic, and isn't limited to specific port numbers. You could even use something like STOMP to build an asynchronous messaging layer on top of RMI (or any other messaging protocol). Q: Slide a DIV in To appear I have a div and it is hiding and showing. What I want to do is on click of up and down, it should slide that div up/down. Javascript Code to hide and show is function addLayer() { document.getElementById('up').style.display = 'block'; document.getElementById('down').style.display = 'block'; } and on click of up and down function plusminus() { if (document.getElementById('down').style.display == "block") { document.getElementById('down').style.display = 'none'; } else if (document.getElementById('up').style.display == "block") { document.getElementById('up').style.display = 'none'; } } Fiddle A: first-change-this line
