Gross total resection of the tumor was carried out and histology confirmed the preoperative diagnosis. A follow up computed tomography scan 6 weeks after surgery showed no evidence of residual tumor. The patient has remained disease free at 12 and 12 months of follow up. Q: How do you represent an abstract function in a linear programming model? I am trying to write an LPP model for a scheduling problem where the costs of having a certain resource allocated to certain projects is dependent on the actual hours worked on the resource. The resources are determined and fixed. So in this model the scheduling problem is essentially: "What hours should we allocate the resource to projects A and B, given the resource has already been allocated to project C?" I will try to explain what I have done so far and will post a screenshot of the model when it is completed. I have the model as a function which is the combination of multiplying for A,B, and C The problem is that when I use this model my A and B objectives are equal. I am not sure what to write for the model to make these different. It is clear that when an unknown project is allocated to a known project that it will be a cost savings (that is the objective is negative), and when an unknown project is allocated to an unknown project it will be a cost increase. I would think that the model I have right now would treat this as a free resource as well. What am I doing wrong? Here is the screenshot with the A,B,C as the three objectives for the optimization problem: Here is the PDF I have on my model. A: Your model is wrong in that: A is not linear in the number of hours; B is not linear in the number of hours. Instead, you should have A be linear in the number of A-projects, and B be linear in the number of B-projects.
