India Shawl Mackenzie. Chak De India - HD Online Player - 2013. While possibly the most famous part of the Bank of England's vaults, these vaults have provided housing for the bank since 1909. The Bank moved out of its former home on Threadneedle Street a century ago, turning Bank Hall into the home of the Bank of England and moving to its current home which is within Bankgate St in 1932. The Bank of England requires an enormous number of deliveries of cash and coins, and to meet this requirement, the vaults have their own sorting centre in vaults 'A' and 'B'. Access to the vaults was first restricted in 2004 after the bank ran out of space, and the restriction was put in place until an expansion could be built. According to the bank this was due to be completed at the start of next year, but a spokesman said: "We can confirm that the project is currently at an advanced stage and we are now looking to secure forward planning consents to enable construction to proceed and the project to start in mid 2015." A £15 million extension is being built for the vaults, which will hold more than £2 billion in cash and coins and be able to store an extra £100 million in cash. An official spokesman said: "The plans to expand the existing vaults mean that visitors now have the opportunity to see what life was like during the bank's years on Threadneedle Street, and we hope that this will be a great attraction for the capital. "The new vaults, which will be fully operational by 2017, will benefit from many of the latest developments in the field of security, as well as having direct access to the Bank's new Central London delivery centre, to enable the staff there to transfer large quantities of cash and coins to and from the vaults. "Our investment in the new facilities means that we can provide a flexible, secure facility that is integrated with the rest of the Bank." The Bank of England is now discussing plans to install further new vaults which will add even more storage space for cash and coins. The Bank of England will create a legacy that will be the largest and most secure cash and money storage facility in the UK, and it was recently announced that a further £150 million will be invested to expand the site. The present
